SATURDAY EVENING, JULY 28.

DEMOLITION OF MILTON'S RESIDENCE. -In the early part of this year the last of the nu merous houses inhabited by Milton, the poet, was levelled to the ground. It was situated in Gordonsville..... 6 40 Petty France now Queen Anne's Gate-Westminster, and originally overlooked the Green Park, the back of the building opening Denity York street. In this heart the property of the building opening into York street. In this house "the greatof poets" passed the happiest and the years of his life. When combealth, in 1652, to resign 11

See etary to the Parent Scotland saddest in comm-.ue situation of Latin ..vy Council, he removed 1 ard to Petty France, where, ... noion with the first scholars of the

, ne lived for eight years, surrounded by all the moral worth of his time. Here his first wife died in giving birth to her fourth child. and Milton, shortly after her death, married again; here he also lost, from a similar cause, his second wife, in twelve months after marriage. Last'y, it was in this house that he became totally blind." In demolishing the house the stone tablet erected to Milton's memory and affixed to the wall by Jeremy Bentham, who afterward occupied the next premises, was carefully preserved. It bore the following in scription: "Sacred to Milton, Prince of Poets." It is said that when Bentham took visitors to the house he compelled them to kneel before the slab. This must have been meant as a grim jest. The eccentric recluse was no lover of poetry. As a duty, he once read Milton's works through, but he used to declare that all time spent either in reading or in writing poetry was sadly misapplied.
